All students in residence who have been three years at the Hall are eligible for membership.

Two meetings are held during the year, the Annual Business Meeting in January and a Social Meeting on the Second Saturday in November. The Committee is elected annually at the Business Meeting.

The Subscription is 2s. per annum or £1 10s. for life.

Report for 1911.

THE Annual Social Meeting was held at College Hall on Saturday, November 11th. Miss Morison, Miss Lindsell, and between thirty and forty past and present students met in the Common Room and after tea, a lecture on China was given by Miss Kemp. The lecturer gave an informal but extremely interesting account of some of her travels in unfrequented parts of China, illustrating her remarks by beautiful lantern slides made from her own sketches. The autograph of the Dowager Empress of China was shown. Unfortunately many members were kept away by the bad weather, but those who were present were enthusiastic and it is hoped that no long time will elapse before Miss Kemp gives another lecture to the Association.

No application for a grant from the Eleanor Grove Bequest has been received this year.

It is a regrettable fact that only one fresh member has joined the Association this year, although each student who has left the Hall has received an invitation to join. As the Association has lost two members by resignation and one by death, it is clear that its days are numbered unless a larger proportion of old students join its ranks.

The past year has seen a very important forward movement in the history of College Hall. For some years a gradual change has taken place in the conditions of life of women students in London, which has had a considerable effect on the fortunes of the Hall. As compared with former years, fewer students come up who are able to pay the somewhat high fees which the larger rooms necessitate; though there are always more applicants for the smaller rooms than can be accommodated. In view of this fact and also of the circumstance that the present building is very much out of repair, the Council has decided to rebuild the Hall if the necessary funds can be obtained. The new Hall will contain accommodation for fifty or sixty students, with a dining hall, common rooms, library, studio, and possibly a gymnasium. Some of the rooms, it is hoped, will be at a fee not exceeding 25/- a week. The Council has given most anxious consideration to the whole matter and has tried unsuccessfully to find another site equally convenient but less expensive. The necessity for reconstruction has been urged upon the Council by the Report of the Committee of the Senate of the University of London, which, while emphasizing the suitability of the location of the Hall showed also that under present conditions it could not meet modern requirements. It is sometimes forgotten that, except for the Pfeiffer Bequest which is earmarked for scholarships, College Hall has practically no endowment whatever and is entirely dependent on its students' fees and the contributions of Members of the Hall and a few generous supporters. At least £30,000 will be needed to purchase the freehold from the Duke of Bedford and the remainder of the lease of Byng Place (eleven years) from the Coward Trustees and to build the new Hall. There is now an opportunity for every one who has been fortunate enough to live at College Hall and has appreciated the advantages of collegiate life there, to help the Council by subscribing or collecting money for the new building.

The Sixteenth Annual Meeting was held on Saturday, January 27th, 1912.

Miss Morison took the chair. The Treasurer's statement of accounts showed a balance of £54 16s. 7½d., of which £32 1s. 9d. is the unexpended balance of interest on the Eleanor Grove bequest.

A grant of £10 was given from this money towards the equipment of a week-end cottage, which has been taken at Flackwell Heath, for the benefit of the students living in College Hall. The cottage is managed by the Principal and the students; the furniture has been lent by one of the present students whose guardian has promised £10 a year towards the rent. The cottage will prove a great boon to the students, especially during the summer. The following charges have been arranged:—

1. Week-ends.		Per day.
Members O.S.A.	-	1/9
Others	-	2/6
2. During holidays.		Per week.
Present Students	-	7/-
Members O.S.A.	-	11/6
Others	-	15/6

The Committee were re-elected, with the exception of the Hon. Secretary, who resigned her post, but undertook to act until a successor should be found. Miss Fraser was elected on to the Committee.

It was decided to have a Life Subscription of 30s. and to reduce the Annual Subscription to 2s.

It was decided that the Association as a body should not subscribe to the Rebuilding Fund; but that later on when the plans for the rebuilding were more matured, all past and present students should be asked to subscribe for some definite part of the New Building.

L. E. V. Saville.

We are indebted to Dr. F. A. Stoney for the following notice.

Lillie Saville, the daughter of a missionary, was born in 1869 at Huahine, an island in the South Pacific. She was educated at the School for Missionaries' Daughters at Sevenoaks, and resided at College Hall during her medical training at the Royal Free Hospital.

After qualifying in 1894 she went almost immediately to China under the London Missionary Society, and spent seventeen years in Peking and Tientsin. In addition to her ordinary work as a medical missionary in Peking she trained a large number of native girls as nurses and dispensers.

Although she could spare little time from her work she contrived in her short holidays to travel in the interior of the country and increased her knowledge of China and its interesting people. She had learned to speak Chinese fluently, and when the foreign ladies in Peking were invited, as a very special privilege, to visit the late Dowager Empress of China, Dr. Saville accompanied them and was able to sustain a conversation with the Empress, whose originality and mental capacity greatly impressed her. Sir Robert Hart was a friend of many years standing.

On the outbreak of the Boxer riots Lillie Saville and a colleague were in charge of the L.M.S. Mission in Peking. The Mission and the native Christian colony were in danger, and they applied to the American Mission to receive and shelter them. The Americans were only able to promise to receive them if British soldiers were sent to help the American men. As no man could be spared to go to the British Legation, Miss Saville undertook the dangerous task. She rode in a native cart, with her face concealed, accompanied only by a faithful Chinese man, through the midst of howling mobs to the Legation, taking two hours to accomplish half a mile. She insisted on seeing the British Minister at that late hour, and after much persuasion obtained the promise of a guard, but only for the next day. This even proved impossible and the missionaries and their dependent natives were compelled to leave all their belongings and take refuge inside the Legation, where Dr. Saville administered anæsthetics and took charge of the nursing during the siege which followed. Her work was recognised by the bestowal of the Royal Red Cross by the King.

Her health was undermined by the strain she had passed through and she was invalided home. To her great disappointment the London Missionary Society did not consider her health sufficiently good to accept her services again.

Subsequently, however, she was invited to take charge of the Imperial Hospital for Women at Tientsin, the first post held by an English medical woman under the Chinese Government. In spite of her isolated position and the miserable quarter in which the Hospital was situated she enjoyed her work thoroughly.

Owing to a scare of plague early in 1911, she postponed her much needed holiday until August. On her return to Tientsin she was taken suddenly ill, and on the 25th of August, after three days' illness, she passed away. She was honoured by a military funeral.

Thus to die amidst the Chinese Christians whom she had loved and laboured for so long was what she herself would most have wished.

Lillie Saville possessed in a high degree the qualities of "grit, grace and gumption" which, she used to say, were necessary for any missionary; her unflinching courage and devotion to duty, combined with a most lovable and unassuming nature, enriched the lives of all who knew her.

ROSA MORISON.

THE Report of the College Hall Old Students' Association was written before the sudden death of Miss Morison, but it was felt that it could not be sent to members without some accompanying notice of her, who was its honoured president and who, in this capacity presided at the Annual Meeting a few short weeks ago.

On the 8th of February Miss Rosa Morison while engaged in her usual work at University College was suddenly called to her rest. She died in her room at the College having just finished a letter connected with College affairs. Those who knew her best feel that this is just what she herself would have wished and this knowledge is in some measure an alleviation of their grief. She found most of the happiness of the last few years in the College and in her intercourse with the Students. To be laid aside and unable to be there was what she dreaded more than aught else and we who loved her rejoice that she was spared this great trial. It seems as if this sudden call formed the natural ending of a life of service, a life, which was devoted to enlarging the horizon of women's outlook, while at the same time helping all the girls with whom she came in contact to fit themselves for the wider spheres which were opening to them.

While Miss Grove and Miss Morison began this work together at Queen's College, it was at College Hall that they found their greatest opportunity and there are women now scattered all over the world filling responsible positions, who owe more to the example and precept of the first Principal and Vice-Principal of College Hall than can ever be told. They showed in their life together the ideal of devoted and yet unselfish friendship, of unswerving loyalty to other women, of faith in the possibility of women's achievement, which was un-failing and which was a constant inspiration to every one with whom they had intercourse.

Miss Morison was born in 1841, was educated first at a private school at Greenwich, where as report tells us she was held up as a pattern pupil. Later she went to Queen's College, Harley Street, where her own education finished, she was appointed on the staff as Classical Tutor. In 1872 Miss Eleanor Grove was appointed Lady Resident of Queen's College and then began that friendship which lasted without a cloud to dim its brightness till Miss Grove's death in November 1905.

Miss Grove and Miss Morison resigned their appointments at Queen's College in 1881. In 1883 College Hall was started with Miss Grove as Principal and Miss Morison as Vice-Principal and shortly after Miss Morison was appointed Lady Superintendent at University College, a post created at that time.

In 1900 Miss Grove felt that the time had come for her to rest from her labours and she and Miss Morison therefore resigned the Principalship and Vice-Principalship of College Hall, but their interest in everything pertaining to the place remained as keen as ever and their greatest pleasure was to see or hear news of old students. One of their great desires was that former students of College Hall should always remember their existence as a corporate body, and it was a very real disappointment to them that up to the present it has not been found possible to have some room at the Hall, which would be made into a definite meeting place, set apart for their use. Perhaps when the new College Hall is built this longing of theirs may be carried into effect.

To one, who knew both Miss Grove and Miss Morison intimately after College days were over, the most prominent characteristic of each after their affection for the other, was the genuine never failing interest they took in all young people, in their joys and sorrows; in their work and in their play; in their aspirations and in their achievements, however tired they might be, however ailing, it was all forgotten when an old or present student sought their help or counsel. No trouble was too great if it could aid another woman and when Miss Morison was left alone after her dear friend's death in 1905 the way in which she tried to find solace was in carrying on these traditions. Hers was no selfish grief, she felt that it behoved her to continue what Miss Grove had given up her life to do and until the very end, this was permitted to her.

It seemed to us who watched her, that during the last year Miss Morison became more and more beautiful, both in body and mind. She seemed to have gained a ripened sweetness and without losing her energy to have grown in large-hearted wisdom and patient understandingness.

I. M. M.

Miss Morison was buried on February 12th at Hammer-smith Cemetery. The funeral was official. All lectures were suspended for the morning at University College, and after a short address had been delivered by the Provost, Dr. Gregory Foster, the procession left the College for St. Pancras Church, where the first part of the service was conducted by the Rev E. L. Metcalfe. The congregation included, in addition to relatives of Miss Morison, the Provost and many Professors and Lecturers of University College, representatives of the Students' Union, members of the Council of College Hall, and a large number of past and present students.

Miss Morison has bequeathed to the Old Students' Association £500, together with the furniture given to herself and Miss Grove by past and present students on the occasion of their retirement from College Hall.
